

Slovenian society of geography teachers invites to

The 4th International Conference

“Karst. Water. Human.”

June 3–4, 2022

The aim of the international conference is to provide the participants with an opportunity to exchange their experiences and reach for ideas and novel approaches to teaching geography or any other school subject when focused on the field of karst, karstic landscape and the impact of human in karstic regions.

We look forward to your presentations of various learning strategies, innovations, fieldwork, use of modern teaching technology and the like, with which you encourage students and their creativity. Examples of classroom lessons as well as new distance learning methods are welcome. It is also important to encourage young people to take an active part in understanding sustainable development in the region and to be actively involved in local communities and the environment.

The main emphases and directions of the importance of understanding karst, karstic landscape, the impact of human in karstic regions and their placement in the classroom will be presented by invited lecturers from Slovenia and abroad. The international conference is an opportunity to exchange experiences, opinions and also socialize teachers of geography and related sciences.

At the conference, the following sub-themes will be addressed:

- water in karstic regions (water action, local water resources/water supply ...),
- environmental challenges in the karstic regions,
- sustainable development in the karstic landscape,
- human and karst (management, traffic, urbanization ...),
- possibility of local self-sufficiency,
- field work on karst,
- learning about karst on the distance,
- other challenges in karstic regions.
